

Managing in the Next Society

Change has become a constant. Changes in the way we live and work. Changes in institutions and the society around us. Changes in peoples needs and desires. For more than 60 years, Peter Drucker has been modern societys preeminent thinker, lecturer, and writer of and about change and its effect on management. Now, at the start of the 21st century, this major new title takes the listener into two broad areas of life today: first, the information society and its new and vastly different employee, the knowledge worker; and second, the underlying trends in todays society that are already influencing, and will greatly change tomorrows. These major trends include: The Global Baby Bust; The New U.S. Demographics; The New York Force; The More competitive Knowledge Society; and the Future of Top Management, among others.
