

DemeTdron

Steven Brandt, a disabled anthropologist, is out on a routine hunting trip where he finds himself in a precariously dangerous situation when he is the victim of sudden geological event. This geological event will transport him deep within the earth, through a sink hole, to another world-a lost world far under the earth's surface. The electrifying ride down is not without its bumps, twists and turns as Steven is injured on the way down. Given up all hope of survival, Brandt assumes that he is going to die until the sensation of the fall begins to stop; hope starts to shimmer in his heart as he struggles within the tomb of Earth until he reaches empty space. Doctoring himself up as best he can, he ventures out into the cave exploring. Finding the cave's entrance, he is astounded by the sight before him. Looking out of the cavern he is standing in, he sees it opens up to a much larger cavern teeming with jungles and volcanos off in the distance. Weeks would pass as he healed, living off of the land, until he was able to travel, to explore this unknown world deep within the earth.
